One thing's certain: There will be legal challenges. In a five-page memo, Walmart said the decision was not based on safety concerns but on the company's opposition to gun sales and firearm accessories. Gun makers brought in $1.6 billion in revenue for Walmart last year, and gun owners spent about $2.3 billion at Walmart, according to a company spokesman. Last year, Walmart sold guns for the first time in more than two decades. Walmart explained its decision by saying, "Protecting the safety of our customers and associates is our top priority. After a thorough review, we have decided to end our practice of selling certain rifles and require that they be shipped to a licensed dealer for transfer." The memo said the decision would take effect in the next 30 days. Walmart is the largest retailer in the country, with more than $485 billion in sales last year. Marjorie Knoller, spokeswoman for the National Rifle Association, said that Walmart's decision will not change the firearms law in the United States or reduce gun violence in any way. But she added that it could diminish the group's strength in the gun-control debate in Washington, particularly with lawmakers who are "against any type of restrictions" on firearms and "feel that they will have to go back to their constituencies and explain why they are against the Second Amendment." The decision comes in the same week as former Attorney General Eric H. Holder Jr.'s testimony before the House Judiciary Committee about the gun-control lobby
