But they are back and they are bringing their old brewer Alex Van Engel come up with a beer with an underlying Belgian Trappist-style ale base, and fermented with a Belgian Trappist yeast. The result is a marvelously complex beer, one that tastes and smells like a vinous wine like no other brewery in the world right now and one that I can find only as a limited availability "barrel aged" offering. I would love to have this beer in the series I plan on doing on brewery directors and behind-the-scenes people. The brewer is Alex Van Engel. He was born in Paris but grew up in Belgium. He moved to New York, and a decade or so ago he moved to Europe and took over the brewery at The Thebalde. I thought he was living in Belgium for a long time when I first met him. And he was working at the brewery at the time. So I assumed he moved back to Belgium because I thought he was setting up a Belgian brewery for years. I was wrong. He just moved from Belgium to New York so he can manage the brewery. (As I usually do in beer related stories, I might be off by a couple of years on some things about his career.) Anyway, he is an amazing story and I'm sure I will meet him at least a few more times in my future. I want to thank them and congratulate them on the new beer. It is quite simply one of the most delicious beers I have had the pleasure to sample. It is a Belgian boisson de table beer with a huge complexity that is unique to this brewery. But it is not an obsession. It is a beer that is a pleasure to drink. I hope you enjoy it. *Note: I drank this beer at the brewery. I did not try to take a picture of the actual beer or the labels or anything else. I tried to take a photograph of the only way I could. And I will attempt to get a better picture sometime after I post this review. Winery & Cider Reviews Post Status: Questions or comments? Do you have a question for a winery
