The table has about 1000 records in it, and an array of values...in order to help me understand what I am actually doing... I will simply refer to a single value (as the sql query needs to just apply to this single value...and I want to understand as I go | id | rating | comments | | 1 | 2 | what does this mean? | | 2 | 5 | more | | 3 | 2 | thing | I want a query to add +1 to the counter. So the first one would look like this: | id | rating | comments | | 1 | 2 | more | And the second would look like this: | id | rating | comments | | 2 | 5 | more | What I want is for there to be a record where each row has the same id, but a different rating, and this would be the query that would go and add a +1 to the counter and then return the records that match that criteria... //update... just found it...I am using an auto increment value and php to get the id. A: UPDATE yourtable SET rating = rating + 1 WHERE id = 2
