Suburban home series The suburban home series is a mid-century modern home designed by architect D.M.D. Roth in collaboration with furniture designer Jay Gimpel for the Olson Brothers department store, which had been owned by the Olsen family, in Portland, Oregon, United States. The house was designed by architect D.M.D. Roth for the brothers' home in suburban Portland. The house features a flat roof, portholes in the exterior walls, and a complex foundation, which allowed for the addition of a staircase and elevator, exterior terraces, and services in the rear of the home. The series was originally exhibited in the 1958 Portland Architecture exhibition and was later exhibited at the Portland Art Museum. Endoscopic retrograde cholangiopancreatography is currently the most widely used endoscopic technique in the evaluation of obstructive jaundice. Although it is the preferred diagnostic method in the workup of patients with suspected pancreaticobiliary disease, it has been largely supplanted by other methods in some centers. The procedural technique is fairly straight forward, and endoscopists who have had this training are able
