Technical Field The present invention relates generally to data processing systems and, in particular, to the storage and retrieval of data in data processing systems. Still more particularly, the present invention relates to a method, apparatus, and computer implemented instructions for saving intermediate results during parallel operations. 2. Description of Related Art Multiprocessor systems are those in which multiple processors work together on a single task. For example, a server system is a multiprocessor system. In a server system, multiple processors may be embodied as individual microprocessors that are placed on a single circuit board or in a single computer enclosure. Alternatively, multiple processors may be placed in separate computer enclosures and interconnected by one of several different forms of technology, including parallel channels, inter-processor bridges and various forms of general purpose input/output (I/O) links. In a parallel computing environment where a plurality of tasks are to be performed, the tasks are typically distributed across a plurality of the processors. One of the challenges in designing a multiprocessor system is to efficiently perform multiple tasks concurrently. When so many tasks are to be performed, a task needs to be assigned to one of the processors to perform the task efficiently. There are different algorithms to be executed in a parallel programming environment. One such algorithm to be executed is a parallel operations algorithm. Parallel operations algorithms may be used to overlap multiple instructions, such as a user program with data processing, during the processing of that data. The goal of many parallel operations algorithms is to achieve speedups through utilization of multiple processors. In many cases, a program or a task has to be split to two or more processors. For example, if a user program with data has been
